Q: Sorting objects in an array I'm working on an application in Android using JSON. The application consists of a main object "Solutions" containing a number of solution objects (each a subclass of Solution), and a number of company objects (each a subclass of Solution). The company objects contain a number of project objects (each a subclass of Solution). A Solution object has a member field called "projectCount", and a project object has a member field called "solutionCount". The problem I'm having is that, in the company object, solution objects are not being sorted by the value of the "solutionCount" member field. This is causing a sorting problem, because the solution objects are not being sorted by the "solutionCount" member field. I have seen questions here on SO about sorting a list of objects, but in my case, my list is one object, rather than a list of objects, so I don't think the solutions and project solutions methods would be relevant. My code for company object is as follows:

public class Company { private Project[] projects; private int solutionCount; public Project[] getProjects() { return projects; } public void setProjects(Project[] projects) { this.projects = projects; } public int getSolutionCount() {

return solutionCount; } public void setSolutionCount(int solutionCount) { this.solutionCount = solutionCount; } }

Can anyone suggest a way to sort the company object's array of project objects by the value of the solutionCount member field? A: Can anyone suggest a way to
