semiconductor elements or elements. It is of course well known to package semiconductor elements, such as, for example, transistors and resistors, in a semiconductor device. In the production of such a semiconductor device, a plurality of transistors, etc. are formed on a semiconductor wafer, and the wafer is cut or broken up to divide or separate the semiconductor device into individual semiconductor chips. Heretofore, the aforementioned semiconductor device (or semiconductor chip) has been divided (or separated) into individual semiconductor chips by means of a so-called dicing tape, a hole saw, etc. For instance, referring to FIG. 4, a plurality of semiconductor devices, each of which comprises a semiconductor element 12 and an insulating film 13, are formed on a wafer or semiconductor substrate 11. Then, the wafer 11 is diced by means of a diamond disk 14 into individual semiconductor chips. Recently, in the production of the semiconductor device or semiconductor chips, the number of elements per chip has been drastically increased, and the production speed has been increased. Accordingly, the process of the fabrication of the semiconductor device or semiconductor chips is greatly influenced by the cutting margin for the semiconductor device or semiconductor chips, and it is particularly important to improve the cutting margin. That is, as the number of elements per chip is increased, a work of cutting the wafer and dicing the wafer is complicated, and a sufficiently large processing margin must be provided to a portion where no element 12 exists in order
