OAKLAND — A man who lived in an Oakland neighborhood in the early 2000s was shot to death Sunday morning in East Oakland after an argument with a woman and her son in an unrelated incident, authorities said. The victim's name was not released, but he was a transient, according to Oakland police. He was found in an alley behind 147th Avenue and Exposition Boulevard at about 12:37 a.m., suffering from multiple gunshot wounds, police said. The victim was taken to Highland Hospital, where he died a short time later, according to police. Investigators were able to identify the shooter through a surveillance video released Monday, which shows the woman asking the man for change, and the two arguing before an unknown man shoots at the man, police said. The woman, who cannot be identified, could also be heard saying, "Go get the change," during the confrontation, according to the video, police said. Police said they do not know whether the woman and the man argued before the shooting. Police said the shooter fled the scene in a vehicle and is considered a "person of interest" in the case. The investigation is ongoing, but police do not have any known suspect or suspects in custody, police said. Police advise anyone with information to call Detective Mark Andrade at 510-238-3821 or send a tip with the California Crime Stoppers at 510-777-8572. } } } } return bRet; } void BTR_FINALLY_NOTIFY_ME(...) { /*(*finally_block) = 0; TRACE("%p (line:%d, function:%s) finally_block = %p, this = %p, pcl = %p ", (VOID*) (*finally_block)->funcs, (*finally_block)->line, (*finally_block)->func_name, (VOID*) (*finally_block)->this_block

What's New in the Photoshop Pc Software Free Download?

1. Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a lens module, and more particularly to a lens module having a pivot shaft. 2. Description of the Related Art A conventional lens module has a lens set and a lens barrel. The lens set receives light and transmits the received light to the lens barrel via a barrel. The lens barrel is movably connected to the lens set via a pivot shaft. The pivot shaft is typically press-fitted in the lens barrel. However, it is necessary to precisely align the pivot shaft with the barrel while the pivot shaft is press-fitted into the barrel. Thus, the lens barrel usually has to be carefully manufactured to result in a high manufacturing cost. In addition, the barrel is also subject to a high failure rate. Furthermore, when being pressed-fitted, a frictional force is generated between the pivot shaft and the barrel. For example, when the pivot shaft is rotated, the barrel has to be rotated accordingly. The frictional force results in a weaker connection between the pivot shaft and the barrel. Thus, the lens set has to be precisely manufactured to avoid any play of the lens set. However, this results in a higher manufacturing cost and a lower manufacturing efficiency. Nov. 21 (Bloomberg) -- Saudi Aramco, the world's biggest listed oil producer, plans a share sale that will help boost employees' pay as crude rebounds from the lowest in almost 30 years and the company confronts the fallout from the stock market plunge. The state-owned company is considering a split that will allow it to raise $30 billion through its Riyadh-listed Aramco Public Investment Company. The IPO is expected this month, according to people familiar with the plan. The extra revenues will fund a revision of the company's incentive scheme, one of the people said. Aramco's "Main Share Sale" is part of a government plan that aims to transfer some oil assets to the private sector and boost capital spending to aid the government's economic recovery. The company has agreed to sell stakes in 50 developing oil fields to private investors through an auction, while it plans to sell assets in the $12 trillion-a-day commodity market. "The share offering is mainly to boost
