Industry standards There are numerous standards or profiles available, such as: AutoCAD/AutoCAD LT 2D/3D standards 3D Studio Max VSE plug-ins RenderMan Plug-in VUE 3D Viewer plug-ins Autodesk also promotes this practice of publishing standards (such as these) via the exchange format,.DWG, and the extended binary format,.DWGx. Discontinued products AutoCAD is the only widely used software from Autodesk. However, Autodesk has also produced numerous products under other names, some of which have become integral parts of the Autodesk products, such as: AutoCAD Architecture (discontinued, currently the core component of AutoCAD Architecture) MicroStation FARM (discontinued) QuickCAD (Discontinued since October 10, 2014) Advanced Function Customization (discontinued) Controversy In October 2012, Autodesk announced that they would no longer be offering new version of AutoCAD 2011 and AutoCAD LT 2011. It is the first version of the AutoCAD software since 2002 not to have a maintenance release. The company's move has been widely criticized by the user community and has been described as "dramatic" and "absurd". AutoCAD customers have been forced to move to another company, which can be difficult and time-consuming. Autodesk also went through a similar process with AutoCAD 2000 (which was discontinued in 2005) and with MicroStation (which is still being supported), but has not done so with AutoCAD LT (which is still being supported). The CADTech website was cited in the US Supreme Court ruling in a dispute between US software provider Autodesk and i4i. Technical and software-related problems Prior to the release of AutoCAD 2017, Autodesk had suffered over six years of software bugs in the products. Autodesk attributed many of these problems to the fact that the company was still under a major transition from a limited single product software house to a multi-product company with multiple software development teams. It has also added new standards to address: The new Border and Wrap option can now be applied to both XREFs and dimensions. The new AutoNUMPTS standard can now be enabled or disabled per object. The ShapeType standard, introduced in AutoCAD Release 20, has been revised to now have five major values, instead of three. It also now has a suffix, specifying its category. Important: When you use the ShapeType standard, the original values are kept in the XREFs, so you will not lose the original values. Revised Standards Revised standards now include: Refinement level labels: All labels now have a refinement level to make it easier to see which labels are more refined and which ones are less refined. This information is helpful when you are editing a shape. The label refinement level is displayed in the label text. Label refinement level in text: When the refinement level is 3, the label text displays: "2b." Text size: All label and command labels now have a text size to make it easier to see what size they are. Ascending and descending orientations: The ascending and descending orientations for the shape are now displayed in the same direction. In the past, the ascending orientation was left-to-right and the descending orientation was right-to-left. Other Revised Standards Updated standards: AutoCAD Release 20 includes updated standards for features such as: Polyline: Width and Fill color can be set for polylines. Text: Font name
