Videos of gameplay from the development cycle show motion capture suit data being used to increase the player's speed and acceleration for the ball, and to adapt the player's on-the-ball actions to the needs of the game. FIFA 19 features a similar mode that used player motion captured on field, but powered by in-game elements (ground-force, game physics, and game physics). This meant that players could learn about the physics of ball and player movement while at the same time receiving feedback on the realism of the game. “In moving the experience to VR, we needed to ensure that it retained its control-based approach, in other
