War: Zombie Corp. Server Features High End Dedicated Servers with Zipped - 24/7. Washington Times: On China's Supreme Court: If You Want to Go, You Have to Commit Your Being to That Country's Law I was on the receiving end of a call from a group advocating for China's gender equality initiative early last year. They needed to find someone who knew China's legal history. A lot of people responded to their emails, but I was the only one who expressed interest. A few days later, I started my work at the Center for Strategic and International Studies. Though I was only nominally a policy analyst, CSIS asked me to work on a variety of projects related to China and its role in U.S. policy, but the issue above was the subject of my most substantial work. My project resulted in a 10,000-word policy brief that the authors of the work, Brad Stinnett and Steve Tsang, and I released this summer. The bottom line was that this initiative was part of an ongoing struggle. Since the Communist Party of China came to power in 1949, China's legal system has been state-run and controlled. This has enabled the state to implement and enforce major legal and policy changes throughout the system while also facilitating the implementation of key state objectives. By loosening many of these constraints and by directing the state's resources to certain kinds of activity, this initiative would be the most significant liberalization since the end of Mao Zedong's rule in the mid-1970s. In China, China's laws are laws.
