EDIT: Forgot to add the answer: I was able to generate a JAR file successfully. It was actually a little misleading, because my intention wasn't to distribute it, but to simply run the same code as in my pom.xml from mvn. A: I had this exact issue and found this link that solved my problem: I didn't have to do anything special to the generated code. If you use IntelliJ (Ultimate edition) then you can go to Source Code > Resolve > Source Code Actions. (Command + Alt + L) Q: Can I use a signal and node as a conditional in an RPi-GPIO GPIO.input() call? I have an EEPROM that is used to store a sensor reading. I would like to automatically start querying the sensor when a button is pressed, and stop when the button is pressed again. I figured this could be implemented as two GPiO GPIO.input() calls, one at startup, and another if the button is pressed. I would like the sensor to be queried every 2 seconds. My question is, is it possible for the GPiO GPIO.input() method to be somehow conditioned on some sort of signal or event that I send? The platform is a RPi 3, but any language that uses a GPIO object would be welcome. A: Yes, all the GPIO functions are conditional, meaning that you can set a flag when a GPIO pin is activated, and check the flag in your program to decide whether to do something or not. So I guess that you simply need to keep track of the flag, when it changes from false to true, query your sensor, and when it changes back to false, stop querying. For example: import RPi.GPIO as GPIO

GPIO.setmode(GPIO.BCM) GPIO.setwarnings
