He was born in 1666 in Connecticut. His father was Joshua Yeo who was secretary to the General Court of Connecticut and governor of that colony. He became a soldier and served in the army of Robert Heath, a wealthy merchant of Danbury, in the New York-New Jersey border wars of the mid-17th century. His service was part of the 17th century frontier defense against the tribe of Lenape. When after the war the location of the border between the three colonies was still undetermined, a group of New York's Indian Allies, led by Cornplanter (Iroquois Native American leader Metacomet), moved to the area of the present-day border between New York and New Jersey near present-day Freehold in New Jersey. They demanded that those from Connecticut were to give up all their land in that area to them. In the following skirmish Yeo was a non-combatant. After the war he joined the band as an attendant and in 1686 or 1687 married a daughter of Cornplanter. The New Jersey government sent him to Connecticut to secure the release of a prisoner they were holding there. In 1686, Yeo had himself baptized as a Presbyterian at Danbury and, in 1687, Yeo moved to a new settlement at present-day New Hempstead, New York, where he bought of land. His new f988f36e3a
