Since Phase One and Lightroom 5 use different file extensions, I could not simply import a Phase One.cr2 file into Lightroom 5. You're also not able to reproduce the rangefinder feature set in Lightroom 5's "Frame" mode. However, I was able to install Phase One's Capture One PRO 15 which runs under Windows XP and Windows Vista and is only € 1,299. If you're willing to spend more than € 1,599 on a scanner, software and a Full HD monitor, you'll be able to make the required-information rich.cr2 files. The downside is that you won't be able to import the library information from Phase One's system into Lightroom 5. Some of the new features, such as use of more complex raw files, are also offered by Capture One. Lightroom is still a better option for using Lightroom 5's new features in comparison to the other two mentioned applications. Just like rangefinder, the library's flexibility makes it clear that Adobe continues to know what it is doing. I bought it for "the new, better Photoshop." It still doesn't stop making me cringe. I've been using Lightroom for a few years now, and I like it very much. From a wider perspective, it's ironic that Lightroom has the chops to import a more open RAW format such as DNG and AE is being updated to support all of these changes. I'd understand it if it did this because it's the only alternative right now, but surely there are other alternatives out there somewhere (and one of them has to be better?). The production value is great. The blend mode and mask type combined with the gamma correction are just awesome. Within the time span of a few months we have seen workflow changes, release of a new and fast scanner, changes to RAW, Adobe CC, the new Creative Cloud apps along with new mobile phone cameras such as Lumia 1020!

A new application wide performance optimization and accessibility feature was launched in October 2018 called Performance Monitor. The Performance Monitor feature provides insight into what's happening in Photoshop when you work, plus protects users from security vulnerabilities by alerting them to any problems. The Performance Monitor also allows you to direct activity to either on-screen real-time performance displays or to an embedded performance graph displayed in the Photoshop Performance panel. Performance Monitor provides several predefined notification levels to let you know when Activity Monitor detects potential problems. You can choose to receive notification based on the performance of any particular task, and you can customize alerts to highlight a particular type of problem. For example, you can toggle Performance Monitor alerts between "convenience warnings" and "fatal warnings," or limit high scores to a particular licensing tier. Additionally, Performance Monitor provides near real-time functionality indicating when problems occur, such as when a preview window becomes inactive.
